was not well documented. It was only in 1957 under the initiative of K. Shankar Pillai, a publishing agency – Children Book Trust was established. Succeeding this was the entrenchment of National Book Trust as envisioned by Pt. Jawaharlal Nehru to make low cost books available to young readers. Ms. Vidya acquainted to the audience, an array of writers like Salman Rushdie, Poly Sen Gupta, Kings Joyce etc who are pioneers in children's and young adult literature. The journey of NBT was discussed in detail by the resource person and she explored various picture books that were published in many Indian languages. She briefed about the native voices in these publications, trying to capture the essence of nationhood and spread the message of Indianess in the young minds.

As the session progressed towards the end, the question and answer session was initiated and well moderated by Prof. Francis. This was open to questions from the students and faculty members. The students posed many questions about the author's views on bestselling novels and shared their experience of reading those alluring picture books during their childhood. Students were also curious about the availability of books displayed by Ms. Vidya during her discourse. Dr. Sheeba Murugan, HoD of English, proposed the vote of thanks and in her speech she thanked the resource person for readily accepting the request of the department to address the students. She congratulated the entire department for the success and knowledge enriching session. Ms. Vidya expressed the joy of being affiliated with young, curious and interactive minds in her closing lines. She also acknowledged Dr. Maduramozi, the department coordinator for the thoughtful choice of topic for the discourse. Dr. Sheeba also mentioned that many such departmental initiatives are in the pipeline and the department is consistently engaged towards fostering an inclination towards literature, irrespective of which stream the students belong to.
