Iduna, the beautiful young goddess of the Norsemen, lived in a pretty grove called 'Ever Young'. She had a golden casket full of the most wonderful apples. A hero might come, tired and weary, to Iduna's grove, feeling that he was growing old. Then Iduna would give him an apple from her casket, and as soon as he had eaten it he would feel fresh and young again. It is not surprising that Iduna's grove was never lonely. And, what is still more wonderful, her supply of apples never failed. As soon as all the rosy fruit had been given away, the casket was filled again by an invisible hand.
