Abstract:

A good legal system represents good governance in the country. We may say that India is a vibrant democracy and we may, further, proudly say that Indian society reflects 'unity in Diversity'. There has never been a greater need to fervently discuss the issue of safety of women in public places. The objective of the paper is to study the safety of girl children in public places and to find out their perspectives on these issues and to study their safety at different times of the day. The Study method used for research is a descriptive type of method. This is a non - doctrinal research. Where 200 responses are recorded and questionnaires are asked in public by opting a convenient sampling method. Every citizen and government must try to make it a safe place for women to be in. They must make more stringent laws against people who commit crimes against women. They must also be implemented properly to ensure everyone takes them seriously. If half the productive population of the country is fettered by chains of oppression and fear, then the progress envisioned by the male leaders of the state shall never be achieved.

Keywords : women, legal system, government, safety and society.
